Biographical Notes:

James A. Toman (1941-2016) was a lifelong Clevelander. He was fascinated by streetcars and the Rapid Transit since he was a young child, and interest in public transportation continued throughout his life. Toman was the author or co-author of 18 books about historical topics such as Cleveland. He had published books through numerous publishing companies, but he also was co-founder of the Cleveland Landmark Press. Toman was an educator, and obtained a doctorate in education and clinical counseling. He taught at colleges in the area such as Lorain Community College. He also gave talks and speeches at various places on public transportation in Cleveland, and also had an interest in street and light rail systems in the United States and Canada.

Cleveland Press (1878-1982) was a popular newspaper in Cleveland. For many years it was a popular Cleveland Newspaper. It was founded by a man named Edward Scripps as the Penny Press. It eventually became the Cleveland Press by 1889. It was printed for over a century until the economy and competition from the Plain Dealer came into play. Although the newspaper staff was talented in their writing, the press could no longer go on and was eventually sold despite trying to create Sunday and Morning editions to the paper.

Herbert Harwood (1926-present) A few photos from the collection belonged to Herb Harwood at one point in time. He is an expert of rail history and railcars all throughout the United States. He has published numerous books on the topic including “The Lake Shore Electric Railway.” James Toman and James Spangler used him as a resource for their book.

Anthony F. Krisak (1922-1984) took numerous photos of railcars and streetcars. He also was a motorman on the Shaker Rapid Transit system for nearly three decades. He was an avid rail fan and took many photographs from their outings. His son Richard now collects these photos and donated some of them to James Toman and James Spangler.

James R. Spangler (1926-2016) grew up in the city of Cleveland and became interested in the streetcars he rode everyday. Spangler also loved trains and railroads. He took many pictures of streetcars and the rapid, many which appear in the albums in the collection. He co-authored a few books on transportation in Cleveland, one with James Toman. Aside from loving trains, he was a WWII veteran and was a USPS worker. Before his death, he lived in Mayfield Heights.

Bruce Young collected many photographs of streetcars and railroads, in the Northeast Ohio area. He was a former member of the Northern Ohio Association of Railroad societies. He is also a former teacher. He used to reprint his photographs and offered them to people in Cleveland. Many copies of his photographs appear in the James Toman collection.

Other people worth mentioning are Blaine Hays a rail historian who helped James Toman write numerous books, and William Vigrass whose name is written on the back of many photos in the collection.
